THEME: Domestic Geographies

Home is made of intimate elements that connect us to the heart of life. It is that place where meanings are built, emotions are cultivated, experiences reverberate and relationships of support, care and work with others are developed.

A universe built between marginality and the endearing, that we have been forced to occupy historically, but that nobody values. Producers or often reproducers, we have actively participated in the creation of affections and goods in a private sphere that no one recognizes.

We have not stopped appropriating this space to reinvent it: from our own room, to experiments in communal coexistence; women have reinterpreted the roles assigned to us in this place to explore new domestic geographies.

This is an invitation to present works that redefine our roles within the home, and that at the same time explore the ways in which we have shown expansive capacity and political resistance within the private sphere.
